Rail Refrigerator Service History Briefly Outlined

The first refrigerator car actually known to have been built in this country began service on the Northern New York Railroad (now part of the Rutland Railroad) on July 1, 1851, when eight tons of butter were transported from Ogdensburg, New York, to Boston in a wooden box car insulated with sawdust. In 1857, thirty insulated box cars were constructed with ice compartments, and fresh meat was shipped from the Chicago Stock Yards to New York and Boston for the first time. A southern Illinois fruit grower succeeded in shipping fresh fruit under refrigeration by rail when, in 1866, he sent strawberries from Cobden to Chicago. A refrigerator carload of strawberries shipped from Anna, Illinois, to Chicago in 1872 was the beginning of the successful carload transportation of perishable food.

The first patent for a refrigerator car was issued in November, 1867, and in 1868 an improved car was designed especially for the handling of meats and fish.

With the manufacture of artificial ice in the 1880's, refrigeration became practical throughout the United States.

On June 24, 1886, the first special train of fruit to be shipped from California left Sacremento, opening up Eastern markets to shippers.

The phenomenal growth of the market for frozen foods, which require intensive refrigeration in transit, has brought about improved refrigerator cars built to standardized dimensions with provisions for easier riding at express train speeds.

Hens Need Ventilation, Poultryman Points Out

Chickens don't need airtight houses for winter comfort any more than a man in red flannels and overcoat needs a steam bath.

Chickens are well protected with a coat of feathers, Irving J. Mork, poultryman of North Dakota agricultural college extension service, points out. You don't need to go to the extreme in providing high temperature conditions in your laying house during the winter, he says. He thinks the average poultry house is closed up too much—especially when the first cool weather approaches.

Closing up the house too much traps moist air. Wet floors and dripping walls will result even though deep litter is on the floor

Keep windows open in a small, uninsulated house, the poultry agent advises. On mild days, wide open is not too far and in very cold weather windows should be open enough to permit free movement of air—even at night.

One way to improve ventilation in poultry houses is to insulate. If ceiling and side walls are insulated Mork says there should be a difference between temperatures outside and inside houses. Higher temperature of moving air inside houses will increase its moisture carrying capacity.

Another way of improving ventilation is to use a properly-installed exhause fan. Such a fan will move two cubic of air per bird of light breeds of chickens. The heavy breeds need two and two-thirds cubic feet of air per bird moved every minute

Wool Used by Ancients

Synthetics, such as nylon-type fiber, have been used as wool substitutes, but none have proved wholly satisfactory. In some respects modern man is nearly as dependent upon fleece from his sheep as were the ancients. Archeologists have found evidence of domesticated sheep as early as the stone age.

Cow's Living Conditions

The better a cow's living conditions, the better her chance of escaping the most costly disease that is now cutting in on American dairy farmers' profits.

The disease, called mastitis, is an udder infection that reduces or stops milk production. In severe forms it may even kill the cow. An intensive study of over 1,000 dairy herds indicates that environment plays a major part in the occurrence of the disease.

The better a cow is housed, with adequate stall room, good bedding, clean quarters and high quality feed, the less chance she has of becoming infected, it was found.

If the cow is milked correctly, her chances of remaining free of mastitis also are much improved.

Management practices and the evidence of mastitis definitely are tied together, the study showed. The worst cared-for herds almost invariably had the most cows suffering from mastitis.

THE KICKOFF

(By Barbara Johnson)

High School news of the week: Well, what's new with you this week, boys and girls? Things are happening so fast at A. H. S. we are having a hard time keeping up with everything.

We missed some of the girls Tuesday. They were the members of the Carol Choir, who were invited to sing at Charlottesville.

A number of our girls have been invited to go to Farmville Friday to dance. This is an annual event at Longwood College. The girls will learn the fundamentals of modern dance, along with round and square dancing.

Don't forget the Monogram Club is presenting a vaudeville show on Thursday evening, March 15, in the school auditorium. Admission is 35c for adults and 20c for students. The event is for the athletic fund.

The characters for the senior play have been selected. They are:
Albert Burrows: Sonny Martin
Julia: Betty Wingfield
Allie: Ann Waller
Frances Gaylord: Inez Hanenkrat
Mrs. Burrows: Barbara Carter
Mr. Burrows: Jimmy Harris
Dannie Evardo: Fleetwood Blackwell
Nora Lansdowne: Helen Poe
Kittie: Barbara Johnson
Consuela Barry: Lois Wood.

This will be a comedy in three acts, and a combination of laughs and thrills and will be presented in April.
